The Campaign in the Soudan.

General Lord Wolseley, Who Has the Chief Command of the British Forces.

The interesting military operations now progressing in the Soudan, and so far prosperous to British arms, add additional lustre to the soldierly of General Lord Wolseley, who planned the campaign being successfully pursued under his superintendence. On the 26th of August, 1884, Wolseley was giving the chief command in Egypt. He arrived in this country about September 9th, 1884, and immediately assumed command of all operations concerning the Soudan expedition, the primary object of which is to bring away General Gordon from Khartoum. When that end has been accomplished, so far as is yet known, no further offensive operations of any kind will be undertaken; and when a road has been opened for General Gordon's retreat, the march southward is to be suspended and the campaign brought to a close. The instructions above were approved and forwarded Oct. 8, 1884, when the nearest of Gordon's friends were two hundred miles distant from Khartoum, in which city he was seriously threatened. As the result of operations directed by General Lord Wolseley, Khartoum is now in communication with a detachment of the British forces, by means of steamers running on the Nile, and the success of the expedition, so far as its avowed object is concerned, assured. Gordon can be rescued, it appears, just as soon as he wishes to be rescued. General Herbert Stewart, it is true, has done the hard fighting necessary to what has been done, but his superior planned the march through the desert which resulted in two victories to British arms, and virtually the rescue of Gordon.

General Lord Wolseley comes of an old family, the Staffordshire Wolseleys, of Wolseley Hall. He was born July 4, 1833, and is the son of Major G. J. Wolseley, of county Dublin. At the age of nineteen he entered the army as an ensign, and the same year, 1852, first smelled powder in the Burmese war. At the storming of Myat-ton he led the party which first scaled the walls, and was severely wounded in the left thigh by a rifle ball. Returning to England he received honorable mention in the dispatches. At the outbreak of the Crimean war, in 1854, he landed with the Nineteenth Light Infantry and served in the trenches as an assistant Engineer. Conspicuous services in the attack on the Quarries, in the assault of June 18th, and in the third, fourth and fifth bombardments of Sebastopol won for him repeated mention in dispatches. On August 30th, 1854, while he was in charge of the advanced line of sappers, the Russians made a sortie, and in the ensuing skirmish Wolseley received such injuries to his head and face from splinters of stone caused by a round shot striking a gabion, that not only was he compelled to retire on the sick list, but his eyesight was considered for some time to be in peril. But this calamity was averted, and he once more joined his regiment, and was wrecked in 1857 in the Straits of Banca while proceeding in H. M. S. Transit to China. During the Indian Mutiny he took part in the relief of Lucknow, in the siege and capture of the same place, and in defence of Alumbagh by Sir James Outram, together with several engagements which took place in connection with that struggle. After this he was in Gude with Sir Hope Grant, to whose force he was attached as Quartermaster-General. He continued to serve in India during 1858 and 1859, and in 1860 served upon the Quartermaster-General's staff during the Chinese war, and was present at the taking of the Taku forts. When difficulties were threatened between the United States and Great Britain owing to the affair of the Trent, Wolseley was sent to Canada by his Government. He afterwards visited the Confederate Army. Later, in December, 1862, he was engaged in putting an end to troubles in the Red River Settlement. When a general was needed to conduct the war in the Ashantee country, Wolseley was selected for the honor. The manner in which he carried on the campaign proved highly successful, and upon his return to England he received the thanks of both Houses of Parliament, a grant of £25,000, and an offer of a baronetcy. This was declined. A special mission to Natal in 1875, a brief experience as ad interim governor of Natal and a number of the Indian Council, and a residence in the island of Cyprus as High Commissioner and Commander-in-Chief, after the Earl of Beaconsfield annexed the island in 1879, are the next incidents in his career. The Islandhwa (or Isandula) disaster in the Zulu war, caused the British ministry to send Wolseley out to take command. He found the war nearly over on his arrival, but he used all the powers he possessed to settle the question relating to it. From 1874 to 1876 he was Inspector-General of the Auxiliary Forces, during which period he made himself popular with the volunteer soldiers of the United Kingdom, an army of civilian troops numbering about two hundred thousand men. The bombardment of Alexandria, July the 11th and 12th 1882, followed by Arabi Bey's retreat into the interior and threatened serious resistance by the rebels against the Khedive's Government, led to Wolseley being again entrusted with the command of a British army. He was given full command of the land forces, with orders to operate jointly with Admiral Seymour of the navy. He sailed on August 23, 1882, with the Horse Guards and the Second Life Guards, arriving at Alexandria on August 14th, two days after Arabi had been declared a rebel by the Sultan, and at once issued a proclamation declaring England's sole object to be the restoring of peace to Egypt. On Wednesday, September 13, decisive battle the Tel-el-Kharir was fought, resulting in the complete rout of the Egyptian rebels. On the 14th of September, General Wolseley entered Cairo, Arabi Bey surrendered, and the rebellion was practically at an end. The British Parliament rewarded Wolseley with a grant of £50,000 for his services, and by the Queen he was created Baron Wolseley of Cairo and of Wolseley in the county of Stafford. After receiving these flattering honors he lived in his quiet enjoyment, until the rescue of General Gordon from Khartoum was entrusted to him.

Opinions vary greatly as to Wolseley's capabilities as a soldier. "Nothing succeeds like success," however, and there can be no question as to his pre-eminent good-fortune.

LATE NEWS.
A Messenger from Stewart's camp, near Metemneh, reached Gen. Lord Wolseley's headquarters at Korti Wednesday night with the startling intelligence that the Arab rebels in the service of El Mahdi captured Khartoum, the capital of Soudan, as long ago as last Monday week, January 26. Gordon's fate is unknown, and the fall of his stronghold has filled Great Britain with apprehension for the fate of the thousands of the English army under Stewart, near Metemneh, under Earl at Brito, the great bend of the Nile, and under Wolseley at Korti, nearly 300 miles north of Khartoum. Army officers are telegraphing applications to the London War Office for assignment to the rescuing force, which, it is supposed, the Government will carry forward at once. But Wolseley was four months reaching the present position on the Nile, and re-enforcements have no means of moving to his rescue with any greater rapidity. They can be sent up the Red Sea to Suakin, but between that point and the Nile there is an almost unknown stretch of desert without a sufficient water supply for any large force.—Ex.

For the New Life.

Thousands of weary women are longing for new life. They are worn out and about half dead. With hearty interest let them read what Mrs. Jenney writes from North Charles-town, N. H.: "The use of Brown's Iron Bitters has reached from Maryland to our quiet little village, and I can recommend it for the new life it imparts when feeling tired and worn out. It gives me new strength and energy." The records of good accomplishment in this direction by Brown's Iron Bitters would fill volumes.

ROSSA'S LAST SPEECH.

His Bloodthirsty Remarks in New York Sunday Night.

NEW YORK, Feb. 2.—The dynamitards met in the Pearl street hall last night and applauded the dry-goods clerks for the Grand secret explosion. Walker Elliot, on taking the chair, said: "You all know what has been done recently, and I think you are satisfied with it. [Applause.] I know that I am. We don't need to send material to the other side. It can be manufactured there."

O'Donovan Rossa, in a wild and frenzied manner, made the chief speech. In the course of his remarks he said: "I have been threatened, I have had more threatening letters sent to me this past week than a thousand men in a lifetime. But I am not afraid. No; Rossa is not afraid of all England and her minions. The glorious acts of last week are held up to the world as murderous, and the innocent babes hurtled are held up in horror. Well and good. How many Irish we have and children have England hurled and murdered? There will be no peace for Ireland until all the English land-lords are killed or frightened out of the island. [Long and wild cries of 'death to landlords!'] When Burke and Cavendish were slain a few years ago, a cry of horror went up. I stood alone among the editors of the country in defense of that renewal. I cried for joy. And now every man and woman in America except the Anglo-manics are glad those villains were slain. I believe not an Irish heart exists in America or in the whole world but wept for joy at the news of the explosions last week. [Loud cheers.] I would pick out 100 men and take them to England. I know 100 men who would go to London with me and go into 100 hotels and set fire to them. One hundred fires in 100 hotels, at the dead of night, will strike terror to England. Repeat the dose until Ireland is free. England, complains because we use a little dynamite. [Laughter.] I tell you before long she will get more of it—wild yells and cries of 'Dynamite, dynamite!'—and this country is passing laws against dynamite manufacture. Bah! Arthur is being made a fool of. What right has he to ask Congress in his message to suppress us? It's English gold and English detectives are making a fool of him. I know some of these spies. I know what they are doing. I know McDermott did it, and this man Phelan is a spy paid with English money. I am not afraid to say so. He put up the job that got Edmunds to put up the dynamite bill. [Yells and curses.] What right have these Anglo-manics, these sons of Puritans, to try to put us down? Are there not more Irishmen than sons of Puritans in this country? Rossa closed with a tribute to Ben Butler and Senator Riddleberger, who, he said, were dynamitards.

The Babies in the Cradle.

Babies are very little things, yet they leave great gaps of loneliness behind them when they die. Mothers save your little ones by giving them Parker's Tonic when they show signs of being weak. This tonic reminds you is so pleasant that an infant will take it, and it will soon quiet and remove their aches and pains.

The Bad Boy.

[Peck's Sun.]

"Send a shilling's worth of wafer crackers over to the hospital, quick," said the bad boy to the groceryman, as he came in with his face all muffled up, walking like a person who has been sick unto death.

"What hospital?" asked the groceryman, as he began to do up the crackers.

"We over to our house, of course," said the boy, as he took a few crackers out of the scales and began to nibble them. "We are the sickest crowd you ever see. Pa has been off his feet for about a month, and he hired the doctor to recommend a trip to Florida. The doc told ma confidentially that unless pa got out of this climate pretty soon he would not live till spring, and ma didn't want to lose pa right in the inclement season, so she sighed and began to mend up his summer drawers, and fix things so he could endure a tropical climate. Pa seemed resigned to his fate, and he looked as though he could eat me without any horse-radish. After dinner he called me home and wheedled and said I ought to have more sense than to trifle with the feelings of a sick man in that way. He said he supposed he was on his last legs, and he wanted to go away in peace, and try and add a few moments to his life, and he didn't want no kicking about his going. He gave me a dollar and said for me not to make no more remarks, and then he winked at me. The next day ma had some company, and the women got to talking about the south, and asked ma why she didn't go with pa, and ma said she was well and hearty and didn't have to go. Then the women whispered a spell, and ma went to the telephone and telephoned to her doctor, and he came, and pretty soon ma was in bed with her lungs bandaged, and her head tied up, and hot water bags at her head and feet, and when pa came home he was scared. The doctor had such a mournful look on his face, and seemed to be so anxious, that pa took him in the bath-room and said, 'Now, doc, I want you to tell me the worst. Is she dangerous?' The doctor said it was not his nature to unnecessarily frighten anyone, but he said doctors often had a duty to perform that they would prefer to transfer to other shoulders. He said he would prefer to wait before expressing an opinion, but he thought it was safe to say that unless the patient had a change of climate at once, she would be allowed to withdraw from the case, as he did not like to be held responsible for what seemed to him to be slow murder in keeping a delicate woman in a climate that was forty degrees below zero half the time, by a penurious husband. Pa was touched. I could see that much through the key-hole. The doc said pa would have to approach the matter delicately, and not let ma know she was dangerous, or she wouldn't go, but just go in the room sort of cheerful, and laugh, and say, 'Hannar, if you will hurry up and get better, and pack up, you can go with me to Florida.' The doc said ma would probably refuse to go, but pa must insist. Well, pa went in with a tall he had borrowed I guess, 'cause it didn't sound like his at all, and he said what the doc told him, and ma was better right off. She said she didn't want to go so far away from her dear boy, but if pa thought it best she would get up and pack up her grip. Pa went out and I told ma she had played it pretty fine, most as fine as pa did, and was going to tell pa about the women putting the idea into her head, and she said that would spoil all, and then I told her I wasn't feeling very well myself lately. Ma smiled and asked me what my symptoms were, and I told her when I sat down all the afternoon my legs ached like the devil, and when I slid down hill all the evening my ears rung, and I had night sweats, and my hands were chapped, and I felt faint before breakfast, and had a corn on one toe, and my lungs felt as though they wanted greasing with fresh orange juice, and cold chills came over me about nine o'clock, when the school bell rung, and my memory was fading so I forgot to split the kindling wood, and I told her if I had time I could think of twice as many things that ailed me as she and pa both. Ma said I was evidently in a bad state, and she wanted me to go, but she didn't want to spring too much on pa at once, so I better go into a decline, and mope around, and siber, and then see a doctor and get the doctor to go to pa in confidence and ask him if he didn't want to save the life of his little boy. So I went to see a horse doctor that works at the livery stable, who saved our cow when she got a carrot stuck in her throat, and he said he would see pa about me. Pa and the horse doctor worked the same ward in politics last fall, and got pretty familiar, and when pa came home and found me soaking my feet in mustard water, and looking like the last run of shad, though I never complained at all, pa said he guessed I better go down to the store and get a new pair of pants and go with him and ma to Florida. Then I knew the horse doctor had been getting in his work on pa."

"And so you are going south, a whole family of frauds, eh," said the groceryman, as he bit the string from the paper of crackers.

"Yes, that's the intention," said the bad boy as he grabbed a raw turnip and peeled it, and began to eat as though he had fasted for a week.

"Yes, we are going unless we get too confounded well," and he went out with his hand sled to catch out a passing sleigh, but happening to remember that he was sick he wandered aimlessly down the sidewalk, occasionally giving vent to a hark-from-the-tombs cough that he has been practicing on, which caused people to turn and look at the bad boy with compassion.

More of the New Crop.

[Franklin Favorite.]

A youth living near Vance's Mill informed us that he once had a dog which, when six months old, rushed upon a gang of partridges and not only killed six of them but swallowed five whole, bills, feet, feathers and all before he could get to him; so his owner and partner on the hunting expedition, not only one out of the six. The partnership dissolved then and there.

[Lebanon Standard and Times]

A writer in the Danville Advocate says that at Mr. B. Miller's, about two miles and a half from Pottsville Washington county, there is an ordinary looking glass which has attracted considerable attention for some weeks. A short time ago a nephew of Mr. Miller was taken ill and finally died. About a week before his death, as a customary thing among some, they turned the looking glass. Upon turning it back there was a picture of an eagle just in the center of a heart. The more these were rubbed or washed the more distinctly they could be seen by all. Many other pictures which "come" have been seen, but what is more mysterious, what can be seen by one cannot, in general, be seen by another, though both be looking at the same time. One can see a correct picture of a cousin who has been dead for years, another a woman without a head, another a skeleton, another a woman dressed in white with a goat by her side standing under a gallows, and so on and on, with an endless variety of such pictures. Gentlemen from this community who are of undoubted truthfulness and who were entire skeptics in regard to such ghost stories pronounce it really a wonder. We understand the owner has refused $35 for the glass.

Horrors of Mineral Poisoning.

When a young man of 25 years I took mercury in pills and was exposed to the weather, being a railroad man. The result was salivation and the poisoning of my whole system with mercury. I suffered untold misery for years. Some few years ago I broke the skin on my right leg, and the poison in my blood produced an ulcer from which I suffered so much pain that amputation was regarded necessary. But instead of having the operation performed I commenced taking S. S. S. The ulcer has entirely disappeared, and no symptom of the blood poison left. I am in better health than I have been for years, and I have no hesitancy in saying that if the best blood purifier in the world, I know of whom I speak, as I have given many of them a fair trial, I honestly believe that S. S. S. has added ten years to my life.

Painful Ulcers.

My mother, who is about seventy-five years old, and a resident of Dooly county, had an ulcerated ankle which gave her great pain and trouble. It became aggravated to a fearful degree, and every application of known or suggested remedies failed to bring relief. Physicians prescribed, but to no avail. After six months suffering I induced her to try S. S. S. One bottle had the remarkable effect of producing a perfect cure, and there has been no return of the disease.

Hog-icide.

[Clinton Democrat Feb. 5.]

One day last week a colored man named John Living lived in the western part of the country, called in two or three of his colored neighbors to assist him in killing hogs. The work was finished late in the evening and the porkers left hanging on a pole in the yard overnight. In the morning the Laborer went out into the yard on arising to see about his meat, and discovered that he was one hog short, some one having carried off away during the night. Going to his yard fence Laborer saw an object some distance away that appeared to be a man leaning against the fence, and went there to see what it was. On reaching the spot to his astonishment and horror he discovered that the object he had seen was indeed a man, leaning against the fence cold and stiff in death. It seems that the dead man was the party who stole Laborer's hog; that on removing it from the end of the pole on which it was left hanging, the thief left the gambling stick fastened in its feet, and in getting over the fence, where found, he had slipped and fallen, the hog, in falling from his shoulder, going to the opposite side of the fence, the gambling stick catching his head and forcing it down against the top rail, hanging him on one side with the hog suspended on his neck on the other side.

We have heard of thieves being caught in the act of their crimes in many ways, but never before heard of one being hung by a dead hog.

This most costly dinner ever served by Delmonico was given fifteen years or so ago to one hundred prominent citizens of New York by Sir Morton Peto. This ostentatious individual expended $20,000 on that one night's entertainment, $200 for each guest. In a review of the dinner, the Times of the next morning described it as a "marvel of skill and art and extravagance." The fowl was smothered in the rarest flavors; the menu was in gilt on embroidered satin; some of the wine cost $25 a bottle; the clearest musicians were engaged at fancy prices; Clara Louise Kelllogg had $1,000 for two songs, and a present besides of a diamond bracelet.

A team of horses ran away at Millwood, Grayson county, throwing the driver, Col. Kinney, out of the wagon and crushing his skull, from which he died.

Only a Farmer's Daughter.

This highly sensational and most excellent society drama will be presented by a first-class company of artists to-morrow evening. The Nashville American says:

"Only a Farmer's Daughter," one of the leading successes of recent years, was presented last night to a highly pleased audience. It is interesting throughout, its plot showing much originality and great dramatic force. The double role of Lizzie Stark and Mme. Laurent, an adventuress, is admirably sustained by Miss Lillian Lewis, an actress of notable talent and beauty. She is excellently supported by Miss Esther Lyon and a company far above the average."

It should be well patronized. Tickets at usual place at popular prices.

DIED.

Mr. Phil S. Redd died at the residence of his step-father, Mr. Jas.
E. Jesup, in this city, last Saturday, of consumption. He had been gradually sinking for weeks and his death was not a surprise to his friends.
He was a young man of exemplary character and kindly impulses who had just reached the period of early manhood when the hand of the destroyer was laid upon him. The funeral services were held at the residence Sunday afternoon and many sorrowing friends followed the remains to their last resting place in the city cemetery. His grief-stricken relatives have our deepest sympathies.

railroad: "I am glad to report that, notwithstanding the bad weather we have had of late which is greatly retarding to our work on the railroad, we are now laying track rapidly and will have 23 miles of road in operation by the 15th of February and I hope to send a train through to Princeton by the middle of July if we can get the earnest co-operation and prompt action of subscribers to our bonds."

Mr. Benjamin Franklin, formerly of

We are in receipt of Nanz & Neu-ner's Illustrated Catalogue for 1885.
It contains explicit directions as to the time and mode of planting all the numerous plants, seeds and bulbs.
Their seeds, plants, etc., give universal satisfaction. Those who have had trouble with northern grown garden seeds or plants may remedy the whole matter by placing their orders with Messrs. Nanz & Neuner, of Louisville. Their goods are adapted to our climate and soil, and never fail to give fullest satisfaction and cost less money than those purchased of northern gardeners.
But send a postal card at once and ask for catalogue so that you may have ample time to make your selections. This firm may be relied upon implicitly as being in every way responsible, correct and prompt.
Their advertisement appears in another column.

CADIZ TELEPHONE: "Uncle York" Shoemaker told us the following story a few days ago, and vouches for its truthfulness. About daylight one morning his wife and Miss Sue Pitts called to him to hasten and come to the door. As he was hurrying out of the house, he heard an unusually rumbling noise in the direction of the old grave yard. When he opened the door he observed a perpendicular line of smoke rising just above the trees, which lasted only a second before it entirely disappeared. He was informed by his wife and Miss Pitts that the smoke was caused by a blue blaze of fire which rose instantaneously out of the ground. The blaze was preceded by a rumbling noise, and it all lasted about five seconds. A few days afterwards he examined the ground, but could see no evidences of a fire or any unusual disturbances of the ground. This is certainly very strange, as there was no smoke visible from any of the chimneys of the houses near by. What was it?
"Uncle York" and all parties who witnessed the sight, kept it a secret for a long time, for fear of being called superstitious. It was only by chance that he mentioned it a few days ago, when we promptly hunted him up and got this account.

In the police court Saturday Pig Green, col, was tried charged with robbing a drunken man named Myers one night last week, and held to answer. Bill Lloyd another colored man was tried for committing a similar offense, the party robbed being C. E. Goodwin, of Caldwell county, but the evidence showed that Lloyd was at home drunk at the time and he was released. A witness was found who swore that Goodwin was also robbed by Pig Green and three other negroes. Green will, therefore, have to answer to two charges.

Lemon Coleman, a girl five years old, a child of Julia Coleman, col., who cooks for Judge Joe McCarroll, was very badly burned Sunday morning. She and some other children, were throwing straw on the fire, in Judge McCarroll's cabin, to see the blaze and her clothes caught on fire. She ran out in flames and was seriously burnt before she could be rescued. Her back, hands, and side were fearfully charred. Her clothing was burned entirely off.
Dr. Fairleigh says the burns are not necessarily fatal. The children were alone when the accident occurred.

Ward's Engagement.

Frederick B. Ward, the eminent tragedian, who is the greatest favorite with our people, will play an engagement of two nights and a matinee at the Opera House this week.
The following is the repertoire: Friday evening, Feb. 13, "Damon and Pythias."
Saturday matinee, Feb. 14, Shake-spear's "Shylock."
Saturday evening, Feb. 14, "Richard III."

Mr. Ward visited this city last season and gave us the finest tragic performances the city ever saw, without an exception. The mere announcement that he will return is sufficient to insure a packed house for each performance. Of his Damon the Kansas City Star says: "Mr. 'Frederick Ward proved by his wonderful interpretation of the character he assumed last night, that he is a great tragedian in more than one respect.
There is something in his appearance that attracts and fascinates an audience, and if he were to appear upon the stage without uttering a word, his presence would be received with tumultuous demonstration. He is possessed of a wonderful voice, and is a master of art of the modulation, which he uses with fascinating effect in his parting scene."

It will be noticed that he will appear in his great masterpiece of Richard on Saturday evening. His superb acting in his character has never been equaled by any tragedian in this city. Parties living in the country may come in Saturday and witness two performances. Tickets will be on sale Thursday morning at Holland & Rodgers'. Prices, first floor, $1.00, gallery 50 cents. Matinee 50 cents. Doors open for matinee at 1 P. M., performance at 2.

That Sensation.

Mr. C. E. Goodwin went before the Council Friday evening and preferred charges against Policeman Shipp Witty. He stated that he was arrested on a warrant for breach of peace and that Witty told him to give him $5 and he would turn him loose and let him go, or words to that effect.
The matter was investigated, but the charge was not sustained. Mr. Witty proved that he was only answering a question of Goodwin's and that he told him he could go before the magistrate and get the matter fixed up for $4 or $5 and it was also shown that he went to the man Lloyd, who swore out the warrant, and tried to get him to consent to the matter's being dropped, as Goodwin was a stranger in the city. The policeman was entirely exonerated. Mr. Goodwin was tried on the charge Saturday and the case dismissed. He is the same man who was robbed of $20 and two $1,000 drafts. The payment of the drafts was stopped and they are of course useless to the thief. In this connection, we feel that it is proper to state that all persons who are robbed in this city are those who fill themselves full of liquor and exhibit their money where thieves and thugs can see it. There are no professional pickpockets in Hopkinsville and none but persons helplessly drunk at night on the streets are ever relieved of valuables.

Certificate of Pomroy's Chill Cure.

CHURCH HILL, Ky., Aug. 9, 1884.
For a year or more, I had been having chills; and could find nothing to cure them. I tried quinine and many other things, but the chills continued to get worse until I despaired of ever curing them. I finally tried Pomroy's chill cure and from the first dose of it until this time I have not had a chill. I am now in fine health and entirely cured of the chills. I say positively that Pomroy's chill cure is a splendid medicine and to my certain knowledge it will cure the worst case of chills. M. M. HAMBERRY.

Habitual constipation is not only one of the most unpleasant, but at the same time one of the most injurious conditions of the human system, and is but a forerunner of disease, unless removed. This is usually accomplished by the use of purgatives, which for the time afford relief, but after their immediate effects have passed they leave the system in a worse state than before. To effect a cure it is necessary that the remedy used should be one that not only by its cathartic effect relieves the bowels, but at the same time acts as a tonic, so as to restore the organs to a sound healthy condition. This PRICKLY ASH BITTERS will do. It removes the cause and restores health.
